Iowa Learning Farms Project 11IFLM001 Integrated Farm and Livestock Management Demonstration Program

Year-End Report January 1-December 31, 2010

Many changes occurred in 2010 for Iowa Learning Farms including leadership, additional projects, greater outreach, and even a name change.

With the retirements of ILF program manager Jerry DeWitt and IDALS program manager Elaine Ilvess, Iowa Learning Farms directorship transitioned to Lois Wright Morton, interim director of the Leopold Center for Sustainable Agriculture; and Jacqueline Comito and Matt Helmers undertook management of the program. Matt Lechtenberg replaced Ilvess and Todd Coffelt became the head of ILF's steering committee as Dean Lemke responsibilities at IDALS shifted.

Along with leadership changes, ILF's focus expanded to include outreach and education for new audiences in addition to the farming arena. Detailed research was reduced while outreach to these new audiences was increased. We began new projects with IDALS and DNR on strip tillage and community assessments for watershed groups. ILF also added an "s" to the word "Farm" to reflect its inclusiveness for our many participating farms.

Beginning with the forum, "A Culture of Conservation: The Tools We Need to Grow," held in January, ILF started the year off successfully, hosting an event for an audience of our peers in the conservation field. With the release of the video "Troubled Waters" in March and the Conservation Station launch in May, momentum swung toward engaging more people as we build this culture of conservation. ILF also held 11 field days and clinics, continuing to utilize traditional means of engaging farmers, which we have proved effective. As anticipated, the Conservation Station has been highly successful. Between its launch on May 20 and the end of October, it was at 50 events and over 4000 people heard the conservation message that the CS brings.

With many areas of the Midwest experiencing a setback in conservation practices, ILF staff takes the challenge of Building a Culture of Conservation seriously, but also with a creative and fun spirit. We hope our spirit is infectious.

-Jacqueline Comito, program manager
